The applicant will expand upon its existing resiliency building activities utilizing 2 exemplary practices: the Bullying Prevention Program and the Resilient Youth Curriculum. The former is a universal intervention for the reduction and prevention of bully/victim problems whose targets are elementary, middle and junior high school students. The latter is designed to guide the participating youth into owning the planning, shaping, and implementation of the curriculum components. The applicant will adapt and combine components of these two models to fit the unique needs of the local Polynesian culture.

This program is an Individual and family mentoring prevention program called the Kokus Mau Lima (Helping Hinds) Youth Mentoring Project which gets female adolescent ages 12-15 who are Asian/Pacific Islanders, specifically Hawaiian, Samoan, and Philippines, who are at risk for alcohol and/or substance abuse. The major goals of this mentoring program will involve reducing risk factors, enhancing protective factors, and strengthening family relationships. These goals will be accomplished through the development of a close and trusting relationship between mentor and youth, and between the mentor and the youth's family, and by providing supportive and structured activities that will enrich and enhance the youth- opportunities and experiences. In addition, structured activities will be provided involving individual tutoring to improve academic outcomes, and group activities for youths and their families to develop and strengthen life management skills and strengthen family relationships.

The Salvation Army Family Treatment Services, in collaboration with community-based organizations and other substance abuse providers, is proposing to serve substance abusing women who are either pregnant and/or have young children, especially Native Hawaiians. The purpose is to increase the number of Native Hawaiian women in recovery, reduce the incidence of infectious diseases, including HIV/AIDS. Pulama e Wahine Ola, a community-based treatment approach, has been designed to help primarily Native Hawaiian women acknowledge their addiction, to facilitate their substance abuse treatment and provide counseling and education on avoiding high risk behaviors. 800 women will receive outreach services and 400 will be referred to treatment.
